Meet your presenter

Professor Peter Grootenboer
Griffith University

Peter Grootenboer is a Professor in Education at Griffith University. He worked in schools as a teacher and leader for 12 years, and in New Zealand he was awarded the Jim Campbell Award for Excellence in Mathematics Teaching from the NZAMT. Peter completed his MEd and EdD through the University of Waikato, New Zealand, focussing on mathematics education and leadership.

Currently Peter's research and development work centres on educational 'middle leading', and he has just begun a large four-year Australian Research Council funded project in this area.

Leading mathematics learning

The importance of educational leadership has been acknowledged for many years, but little attention is given to the crucial role of mathematics education leaders. Leaders, such as Heads of Department and Numeracy Coordinators, are the actual ones who have the greatest influence on what happens in classrooms, and therefore, their leading work is central to the continual improvement of mathematics teaching and learning.

In this session we will look at some practical ways mathematics 'middle leaders' can lead evidence-based development in their schools.
